

The Best Places to Work

IN THE FEDERAL GOVERNMENT

2011 RANKINGS

PARTNERSHIP FOR PUBLIC SERVICE

BEST PLACES TO WORK 2011

The 2011 Best Places to Work in the Federal Government[®] rankings offer the most comprehensive assessment of how federal employees perceive their jobs and agencies, providing insights into issues ranging from leadership and pay to teamwork and work/life balance. The rankings provide a roadmap for building a more engaged workforce and, ultimately, more effective organizations.

The 2011 results show a decline in government-wide employee satisfaction and commitment from 65 to 64 out of 100, compared to 2010. The 1.5 percent drop is not as steep as one might have expected given the difficult economic and political climate that has led to a federal pay freeze, the national discussion around reduced worker benefits, threats of government shutdowns and the certainty of significant agency budget cuts. In fact, the government-wide score of 64 is still 5.7 percent higher than the score in 2003, when our rankings were first published.

The new rankings show improvement in worker satisfaction scores by only 31 percent of federal organizations, compared with 68 percent last year, demonstrating that 2011 was a challenging year for most agencies. At the same time, the rise in employee satisfaction at some agencies suggests that a determined focus on good leadership can have a positive workplace impact even in tough times.

The Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation (FDIC) ranked number one on this year's Best Places list of 33 large agencies, moving up two slots from 2010. The FDIC unseated the Nuclear Regulatory Commission, which ranked second this year after holding the top spot three times in a row. Third place went to the Government Accountability Office, which ranked second in 2010.

At the other end of the spectrum, the lowest-rated large agency for the second consecutive year was the National Archives and Records Administration (NARA). The Department of Housing and Urban Development ranked second from the bottom after being tied for last in 2010, while the Department of Homeland Security placed third from the bottom. All three saw their employee satisfaction scores drop.

FAST FACTS

- ★ The 2011 government-wide Best Places index score measuring federal employees' job satisfaction and commitment is 64 out of 100, down 1.5 percent from 2010.
- ★ Employee satisfaction increased at only 31 percent of the federal organizations, including 22 percent of large agencies, 28 percent of small agencies and 32 percent of subcomponents.
- ★ The highest-scoring "Best in Class" workplace categories are, in order, employee skills/mission match, teamwork, training/development and work/life balance. The most improved workplace category was support for diversity, which was up 1.5 percent.
- ★ The 2011 Best Places rankings include 308 federal organizations (33 large federal agencies, 35 small agencies and 240 subcomponents).

In addition to having the highest satisfaction and commitment score, the FDIC was also the most improved large federal agency, registering an increase of 8.5 percent compared to 2010. It was followed by the Office of Personnel Management (OPM), which jumped from 14th to 9th place in the rankings and raised its standing among employees by 5.3 percent. In contrast, NARA recorded a 7.1 percent decrease in employee satisfaction, the biggest drop among large agencies, and was followed by the Securities and Exchange Commission (SEC) with a 5.9 percent decline. This is the third consecutive that employees gave the SEC lower marks, sinking the financial regulator from 3rd place in 2007 to 27th place today.

While many factors are involved in shaping how employees view their workplace, the 2011 survey for the sixth time in a row showed the primary element that drives worker satisfaction in the federal space is effective leadership, and in particular, senior leadership. Two other key factors influencing satisfaction, revealed by our analysis, were a belief by employees that their skills were well-suited to their agency's mission, and a satisfaction with pay. In 2011, leadership continued to receive low scores from employees, with a government-wide score of 54.9 out of 100. Satisfaction with pay declined 6.1 percent to 59.1, while workers gave high marks (78.6) for the link between skills and mission.

Meanwhile according to Hay Group, employees in the private sector continued to be more satisfied with their jobs, organizations and supervisors than their counterparts in the federal government. While worker satisfaction declined in 2011 for both federal employees and workers in large private companies, the drop-off was slightly less for the private sector.

The Best Places rankings are based on data from the Federal Employee Viewpoint Survey conducted by OPM from April 4 through May 31, 2011. More than 266,000 employees responded to the survey. The rankings also incorporate survey data from eight additional agencies and the Intelligence Community. Most importantly, they serve as a benchmark to measure agency progress, to identify signs of trouble and to spur our government leaders to improve the way they manage their most important asset—their employees.

METHODOLOGY

The vast majority of the data used to develop the Best Places to Work in the Federal Government rankings was collected by the Office of Personnel Management's (OPM) Federal Employee Viewpoint Survey (FEVS). The FEVS was conducted April 4 through May 31, 2011, and administered online to 540,727 full-time, permanent executive branch employees. The survey was completed by 266,376 federal workers, for a response rate of 49.3 percent. Participating agencies comprise 97 percent of the executive branch workforce. The rankings also include responses from nearly 10,000 additional employees at eight agencies who were surveyed at the same time and had a response rate of more than 50 percent. In addition, the rankings incorporate responses from employees of the Intelligence Community, which conducted its own similar surveys, but did not report the number of respondents due to classification restrictions.

Large agencies listed in the rankings are those organizations with more than 2,000 full-time permanent employees. Small agencies are those with at least 100, but fewer than 2,000 full-time, permanent employees.

“AT A TIME WHEN WE NEED TO RECRUIT A NEW GENERATION TO PUBLIC SERVICE, and there is a renewed focus on quality performance, it is especially meaningful that the Best Places to Work rankings measure federal employee satisfaction and commitment, which are essential to effective government.”

*U.S. Senator Mark Warner
Virginia*

“EMPLOYEE SATISFACTION IS A LEADING INDICATOR OF EFFECTIVE ORGANIZATIONS, and there is no better measure of worker engagement in the federal government than Best Places to Work.”

*U.S. Senator Susan Collins
Maine*

“THE BEST PLACES TO WORK RANKINGS ARE A ‘MUST-READ’ for anyone who cares about the federal workforce. They provide job seekers with critical information, based on the opinions of federal employees and managers, and agencies with a powerful tool to attract and retain the best and brightest.”

*U.S. Representative Edolphus Towns
New York*

“BY MEASURING THE JOB SATISFACTION OF FEDERAL EMPLOYEES, Best Places offers a powerful incentive for managers to create better workplaces and, consequently, a government that is more responsive to the needs of the public.”

*Then-U.S. Senator Barack Obama
Illinois*
